The annual report is a fixture of the M25 year, reliably chronicling the main activities of the Consortium and highlighting some of the main people leading activities with reassuring regularity. I have always found it a useful chronicle of the breadth of activities the Consortium supports and participates in. This year's report, as with so much else, is slightly different. The regular features are still present but the team, led by Rachel Telfer and Jeni Kutaika Billiard, have included features especially relevant to working through the pandemic: reflections from members about their experiences and achievements under difficult circumstances, as well as several articles on the theme of online provision and resources. So even if you usually just have a quick flick through the annual report I hope there will be something useful and relevant in this year's edition. And, as with all our activities, we are keen to hear your ideas for next year - please send comments and feedback to m25libadmin@london.ac.uk.
