

Why join a CPD25 task group?

My name is Victoria Li, and I work at Middlesex University Library as a Deputy Library Experience Team Leader. I joined CPD25 Task Group 2 because I wanted to contribute more to the wider library community, take part in professional activities beyond my own institution, and build connections with colleagues from other universities.

Since joining, I have had many valuable experiences, including supporting the Copyright Essentials workshop, attending Deaf Awareness Training with Dot Sign Language, and organising a visit to the National Art Library at the V&A. These opportunities have helped me learn about event planning, accessibility, specialist libraries, and professional collaboration.

One of the most rewarding aspects of CPD25 has been the support from fellow Task Group members. Experienced colleagues have been generous with their advice, encouragement, and guidance, helping me build confidence and develop new skills.

Through CPD25, I have strengthened my skills in event organisation, networking, communication, and collaboration. These experiences have contributed positively to my professional development and leadership journey, and I was recently promoted to Deputy Library Experience Team Leader.

I would encourage anyone interested in professional development, networking, and learning from colleagues across different institutions to consider joining a Task Group. You do not need to be an expert, enthusiasm, curiosity, and a willingness to get involved are all you need. CPD25 is a welcoming and supportive network and being part of it has been a very rewarding experience.
